Bachelor of Civil Law (Law and Society) – INTRA Programme (DC232)

Overview

Students from Bachelor of Civil Law (Law and Society) learn how the legal process operates and how law and social forces influence one another in our modern world. Students explore the key foundations of law (constitutional law, contract law and criminal law, for instance), and examine critical perspectives on the nature of these subjects, the practice of law, and the wider role of law in society. The course also focuses on clinical legal education and building practical and transferable skills (for example, with a mandatory Moot Court module).

Students from Bachelor of Civil Law (Law and Society) course are analytical problem solvers who want to understand the role law plays in regulating social systems and to engage critically with the possibilities of law reform.

Work Areas

Students have the opportunity to study the core modules to prepare for entrance exams to the Law Society as a trainee solicitor, or to qualify for entrance to the Barrister-at-Law degree at King's Inns. See below list of the work areas and jobs that our law students often seek, upon graduation:

- Barrister
- Solicitor
- In house legal counsel
- Company secretarial and governance/ compliance
- Research/ academia
- Policy/ Government department; other public sector areas
- Non- Governmental Organisations
- Business and finance

Relevant Work Experience

DCU's work experience programme INTRA (INtegrated TRaining) is a central feature of education at DCU and an integral part of most undergraduate and some postgraduate degree programmes. It is an optional element of Bachelor of Civil Law and Society.

Students are available for interview from early March for an 8-month placement commencing in September. Placement start and finish dates are flexible. For more information, contact:
